“Where shall we go dancing tonight?”, the rhetorical question corresponds to the title of the site-specific installation by the artists Goldschmied & Chiari that Galleria Poggiali is glad to host. For the first time on display in Milan, the work will illuminate the curfew nights at the end of 2020 through the windows of the Gallery in Foro Bonaparte headquarters.

This is the first ever appearance of this site-specific installation in a private space, after the museum exhibitions at the Museion in Bolzano and the Serlachius Museum in Finland.

The environmental installation gives the public a revival of the Italian eighties through the remains of a finished party. The title derives from the guide for the best Italian nightclubs written by the then Foreign Minister, Gianni De Michelis, published in 1988.

The music of that period continues in a loop without dancers, the intermittent lights color the space, the empty bottles lying on the ground while confetti forms a whole between cigarette and smoke. Among the objects, also one piece from the Untitled Views series, mirrors on whose surface the image of smoke has been imprinted. The work on the floor restores depth to space, amplifying the sense of bewilderment and while reflecting the image of those who look inside, they refer to an illusory smoke. The entire installation is a vision from a recent past that can only be experienced from the outside.

During these times of strong deprivation and isolation the artists considered the work strongly contingent at the historical moment that we are all experiencing. The work acquires a new meaning: “Where shall we go dancing tonight?” it becomes a surreal question and the impossibility of giving an answer arouses a melancholy for a very close past that sounds like an unattainable Belle Epoque.

“Where shall we go dancing tonight?” was exhibited for the first time in the windows on street of Atelier House in Museion, Bolzano in 2015, where due to a diligent museum cleaner, the work was cleaned up and thrown away becoming an international news reported by the BBC, the Guardian, and from media around the world, also inspiring Swedish director Ruben Ostlund for the film “The Square”. Between 2019 and 2020, the installation was exhibited again at the Serlachius Museum in Mantta in Finland in the Italian collective The quest for happiness.
